

65 and Still Working

Making the Right Medicare Decisions

According to a recent survey, 62 percent of people ages 45 to 60 plan to delay retirement, up from 42 percent in 2010.

If you're 65 and still working

Enrollment in Medicare

First, start learning more about your Medicare options three months before your 65th birthday, when Initial Enrollment begins (the earliest period of time you can enroll in Medicare). Initial Enrollment is seven months total—the three months before the month of your 65th birthday, the month of your 65th birthday, and three months after your 65th.

Brought to you by

N

Brought to you by

Brought to you by

Brought to you by

Brought to you by